The production of beet-root angar is a subject that is again awakening attention throughout the country. In the year 1868, the United States abusamed 543,000 Lond of all kinds of sugar, and in 1869, 574,400. The increase is large, and may be expected to go much higher during the present year. Meanwhile, the supply from Culas has greatly fallen off, owing to the destructive warfare now waging there, and, although the Porto Rico crop has ingreased, and our home production in the South is constantly growing, prices during the next twelve-month will fully warrant a vigorous effort to fortify the stock of sugars with beet-rout. At several points in the Western States, and in California, the manufacture is to be tried on a large scale.

The New York Mercantile Journal thinks the prospects of Southern trade for the coming seeson are really good.
